For verb+ing

for + -ing

To talk about the purpose of something, we use a for + -ing construction:

- These double-strength paracetamols are good for getting rid of headaches.
- Are they suitable for backache too?
- What are these two knives used for?
- This one is for cutting bread and that one is just for slicing

What...for?

Note that What...for? can be used in questions to talk about the purpose of both actions and things:

- You pinched me! What did you do that for?
- I wanted to see if you were awake
- What are these two buttons for?
- The blue one is for gaining access to the main menu and the green one is for quitting teletext.

Note also the way in which the for + -ing construction is used to explain the reasons for the following actions:

He was rewarded for handing in the purse.

He was criticised for not coming forward as a witness to the accident.

He was fined heavily for speeding on the motorway.

He was sent to prison for falsifying the accounts.
