Generally

At = place = location

In = building = content / (encajado)

1. In is used for location inside areas:

cities: in New York

2. In is used for location inside a three-dimensional space.

3. We use At when we think of something as simply a point on a map, without dimensions:

Compare:

He is in the house. [house is thought of as a three-dimensional object]

He is at home. [home is thought of as a point]

Compare:

Mr. Nelson is at the restaurant. [He is eating. The restaurant is viewed as a point, only in terms of its function.]

There is a bar in the restaurant. [The restaurant is viewed as a three-dimensional object. The bar is inside the restaurant.]

Compare:

He is at the movies. [He is in the movie theater watching the movie.]

He is in the movies. [He is an actor. He appears in movies.]

Compare:

She is at the hospital. [She is visiting or working there.]

She is in the hospital. [She is a patient.]

Compare:

My friend lives in Madrid. [Madrid is viewed as an area.]

Our plane stopped at Madrid before continuing on to Rome. [Madrid is viewed as a point on a map or itinerary.]

Compare:

We arrived at the airport around midnight. [airport is a point in the city]

We arrived in the city around midnight. [city is an area]

Notice that in many of these pairs, the difference is in the point of view of the speaker. The choice of in, on, or at often depends upon whether we view something as having three, two, one, or zero dimensions.
